Using the language

My plummet into the chaotic structure of academia has been introduced to me with English 306, which I think should be called PC 306. We recently did an exercise from our handbook regarding sexist comments in sentences. I finished the exercise, which involved replacing words like "his with "his/her" and a host of other examples. But I'm curious: To be politically correct, do I put "his/her" or "her/his"? After putting myself through a lot of thought and getting a second opinion, I came to this conclusion. Since the purpose of political correctness appears to be the attempt to force us to do the things we don't want to do, men should have to put "her/his" while women should have to put "his/her."

MATT HENKE